AN INVITATION TO FUND IT

WHERE THIS STARTS

We are not short of research.
We are short of postage.

Almost everything written about menopause was written in a handful of countries. The research exists and most of it is good. It has simply never travelled, because coverage follows the advertising market rather than the population.

A day called World Perimenopause Day reaches Aotearoa sixteen hours before it reaches New York. By the time the country that named it wakes up, the date has already crossed most of Asia, the Gulf and Africa.

MENOBOSSE GLOBAL

SUNDAY 18 OCTOBER

Twenty four hours. One day. Everywhere.

- Opens at first light in Aotearoa New Zealand and travels west with the sun.
- Every few hours it moves on, and the women speaking are from wherever it has reached.
- Each region says what this looks like where it lives, in its own language.
- Free everywhere, for anyone who wants to be in the room.

MONDAY 19 OCTOBER

Two hundred women begin.

They come from the room on the day, from the places where this conversation has never arrived. Over the weeks that follow, each one works through twenty modules and a module zero, because every other course assumes she already knows what perimenopause is.

At the end she understands her own transition, and she can say it out loud.

WHERE THE MONEY GOES

A day, and the two hundred who begin after it.

THE DAY ITSELF

- Twenty four hours of platform, across every time zone.
- Captioning and translation as the day travels.
- Production support for hosts in four regions.
- The recorded library, so it outlives the day.

THE FIRST COHORT

- Her place in the cohort, for the full eight weeks.
- Knowledge checks in every module, and a final assessment.
- Her certificate at the end of it.
- The founder's time across the cohort.

Inside that, $400 carries one woman the whole way through. The day is free to everyone who comes, and the programme is free to the women who take it. The cost is carrying them. Figures in US dollars.
